As the saying goes: March comes in like a lion and out like a lamb. The spring equinox arrives this month. It's also a month when we witness some key transitions between winter and spring.

While things may appear quiet in the depths of winter in Douglas, this is the season when plans take shape for new exhibits, programming, grants and fundraising, as well as art and archival collection work. I'm excited to share some of these exciting projects with you now. Other details will come in the next few weeks.

Taking in the bigger picture, this is also a time of renewal as the work of the last several months prepares to bud and blossom in the months ahead. Borrowing (and paraphrasing) from this week's State of the Union address, my report is this: the State of the SDHC is strong—thanks to the strength and generosity of our members, our volunteers, and our community.

We are all living through extraordinary times. Yet we are stronger today than we were a year ago as a community-centered cultural organization. And we will be stronger a year from now than we are today.

Executive Director

History Lives Here: Historical Markers Project

The Saugatuck-Douglas History Center has launched a new program to celebrate history where it happens across our communities.

The History Lives Here: Historical Markers Project gathered momentum in the fall of 2022 with a team of volunteers laying plans to erect six permanent historical markers across Saugatuck and Douglas this summer. This is planned as the first phase of a multiyear, ongoing SDHC project to share local history in our Lakeshore community. The team comprised of Julie Bizzis, Bill Hess, Elizabeth Jones, Ken Kutzel, and Bill Underdown worked through site selection, agreements with the cities of Saugatuck and Douglas, full program sponsorship, and historical interpretation. The team of volunteers is supported by project historian Anna Minnebo, 2020 SDHC intern and SUNY-Cooperstown Museum Studies graduate.

Supported by a V-shaped steel structure fabricated locally by Jeff Shashaguay, the interpretive markers stand 7’ tall by 2’ wide. Full color interpretive panels (2’ by 4’) designed by veteran SDHC designer Sally Winthers use historic photos and text developed by the team to bring history to life for visitors and long-time residents alike.

Saugatuck markers at Wicks Park interpret the history of the Saugatuck Chain Ferry and shipbuilding; a marker at Cook Park recalls the history of the Big Pavilion and the steamship tourism it attracted, and a Coghlin Park marker explores the importance of the fruit.

Douglas markers are approved for Wade's Bayou interpreting the history of the Basket Factory and the Bayou itself; while a second marker at the Old School House will present the story of the Douglas Union School and home to the History Center and gardens since 2005.
We are excited to announce that both Century of Progress and the related art exhibition, History Book: LGBTQ Portraits will reopen this spring and remain in place through fall of 2022. Covering over 100 years of history, the exhibit shares the stories of people living in the margins at the Lakeshore in a timeline format with local, state, and national LGBTQ developments included for context. Interpretive panels identify factors that have contributed to the diverse and inclusive nature of these two small Lake Michigan coastal villages alongside historical artwork and artifacts from SDHC collections. The exhibit showcases not only the progress made by the LGBTQ community, but also the challenges it has faced and the setbacks it has endured.

Coinciding with the Century of Progress exhibit is a related art exhibition, History Book: LGBTQ Portraits.

This exhibit includes more than two dozen stylized portraits of LGBTQ pioneers—some local—by acclaimed Chicago artist and designer David Lee Csicsko. Biographical and historical information for the exhibit was developed by LGBTQ historian and author Owen Keehnen. Both Csicsko and Keehnen are inductees of Chicago’s LGBT Hall of Fame.

The exhibit is housed in the second floor gallery space directly above the Century of Progress exhibit.

Opening parties and special programming in the month of June is in the final planning stages. We look forward to sharing those details with you in the weeks ahead.

Thank you to the generous sponsors who have fully underwritten this project: Elizabeth Jones and Karen Todd, Dawn Schumann, Bill Underdown, Steve Hutchins, Matt and Cindy Peterson, Bill Hess and Mike Mattern, Cathy North and Marcy Weston, Jen Roe, Beth Stefanchik, and Michael Alto and Rob Naumann. For those interested in sponsoring a marker in future years please contact SDHC board member Julie Bizzis at jkbizzis@gmail.com for more information.
News from the Friends of the Mt. Baldhead Radar Station

A Friends of the Mt. Baldhead Radar Station group has worked tirelessly over the last two years in advocating for the historic site as well as doing the work of painting and securing the building. The mission of this group is to share information about the effort to protect, preserve and promote the Mt. Baldhead Radar Station in Saugatuck, MI.

You can read more about their efforts on their Facebook group page

Wanted: Pieces of History

The Mt. Baldhead Preservation Work Group wants to find any “souvenirs” that may have been taken from the Radar Station over the last several decades so we may include them in our historic archives. We are offering full amnesty to anyone who wants to anonymously return any item(s) that originally belonged to the facility.

Do you have historic artifacts you would like to donate for future preservation? Contact the group at mtbaldheadradarstation@gmail.com.

Here’s a Radar Station item returned recently. We’re not exactly sure what is is or what is was used for. Join in the conversation online!

Six more weeks of winter? The countdown is on!

Mr. Groundhog says “Six More Weeks of Winter”

-contributed by Chris Yoder

One hundred years ago, the Feb 3, 1922 Commercial Record announced a much welcomed bit of Ground Hog’s Day news:

“Mr. G., who is the hereditary chief of the world’s weather forecasting bureau, states positively that spring is just around the next corner. He laughed scornfully at the raging blizzard, and pronounced it merely the last bluff of and old winter, a monarch loath to abdicate his throne.”

Wish this were true this year! The furry prognosticator reports that our 2022 winter will stay around for another six weeks. Bah, humbug!
In keeping with our recent weather and the thoughts of what may still come, I present from the History Center archives a photo of a snow filled Saugatuck Town Square from long past. You can see the old playground equipment and the memorial cannon which was fired at the Bicentennial and before that at big celebrations like the Battle of Santiago, the end of World War I, the end of World War II, as well as the Centennial of the nation in 1876. Said cannon was purchased and donated to the city by Stephen A. Morrison, grandfather of local historian May Francis Heath.

You can also see the Christian Science Church Building in the background, built in 1924. The church web site indicates that services were held before that starting in 1910 in the local Interurban Railway Station, then from 1912 to 1915 in the homes of local members. Beginning in 1916 they rented a hall over Koning’s Hardware (later Wilkins) adjacent to the square. In 1921 the Society purchased the present site of the church building and the structure was completed and ready for use in the summer of 1924.
